If an open society such as the UK restricts the selling of drinks after 2300 hours in general, I don't understand why the liquor licence I learn of in HK allow operation up to 0400 hours.

I think to give people a freedom of entertainment, bars should be allowed to operate as "private party" after 2300 hours, in an enclosed environment (viz. all closed doors and shut windows) so as to reduce the disturbance to the neighbourhood. If you do not know what I mean, please ask people living near LKF or SoHo or Lockhart Road and see how disturbing it is in the very early mornings when most people should be sleeping.
