I'm against the proposal to limit bar opening times as proposed above. You can't sell the city as a throbbing vibrant 24-hour destination if the bars all close at 11 pm! It's true that HK is noisy crowded and cramped with a complex pattern of sometimes conflicting land uses in close juxtaposition with each other; that is an important part of what makes it HK. Parts of HK (particularly core Central) that have departed from that pattern strike me as rather sterile - acres and acres of top-end shops full of things that no-one can afford, and dead as the grave after about 8pm.
